Cartoonists Eric and Bill Teitelbaum skewer the world of business and finance in BOTTOM LINERS, a nationally syndicated business comic panel appearing six times weekly. BOTTOM LINERS tackles subjects such as foreign takeovers, office politics, getting a raise and the fast-paced world of Wall Street.

About the Creators:

Growing up in a household where Wall Street investing and comedy writing seemed to go hand-in-hand, the Teitelbaum brothers used their drawing and humor skills to successfully mix business with pleasure to create a merger that has America's work force laughing.

Bill has an award-winning background in art direction and graphic design. Skilled in both print and television, he constantly creates, writes and designs new characters and programs for television, animation, licensing and manufacturing.

Eric's designs and illustrations have appeared in major publications including the New Yorker, Forbes and Saturday Review. He also lectures nationwide at colleges and universities both in person and via satellite on subjects ranging from how-to seminars in cartooning to the marketing of art.

Bill is a graduate of California State University, Los Angeles with a major in art. Eric holds an undergraduate degree in art and art communications from UCLA and a master's degree in art from CSULA.
